3. [ ] Met with Ed Braswell, Chief Counsel, Senate Armed Services Committee, whom I briefed on recent developments regarding Soviet ICBM tests, Soviet withdrawals from Egypt, SA-3 missiles in Iraq, and fact that photos show no evidence of deliberate bombing of dikes.

Braswell showed me in strict confidence a 17 July letter to Chairman Stennis from Senator John Sherman Cooper urging that the Armed Services Committee take up S. 2224, the Cooper bill requiring that intelligence information be made available to Congress through the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees. In the letter Cooper argued that the experience with the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy indicated that sensitive material could be adequately protected, that he foresaw no problems of executive privilege, and there was no reason why intelligence sources and methods need be exposed by his proposal. I reminded Braswell we had sent over a good deal of material on this subject. Braswell said Stennis planned to "discuss the bill" in the Committee but would probably not "get around to" hearings for some time if at all. Braswell said that at least two members of the Committee--Symington and Hughes--would probably actively support the bill, and that it would probably be carried in a floor vote if reported out.

Braswell asked if we knew anything about the [ ] case. I told him I certainly did not and I was reasonably sure the Agency had no involvement whatsoever. Braswell said it was an extremely troublesome matter since the military were obviously covering something up. He said they had refused to let Jim Woolsey, whom Stennis had sent to the field to investigate, see any Joint Chiefs traffic on the subject.

4. [ ] After consulting with the Director, I called Marshall Wright, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Congressional Relations, to say that the Director would be happy to have Senator Henry Bellmon and some of his informal group of junior Republican Senators (probably Taft, Buckley, Fannin, Roth, and Stevens) visit Headquarters for a breakfast briefing on Thursday, 3 August.

I also received from Mr. Sullivan a listing of the staff members who may be in attendance at the briefing. I met also with Miss Helen Mattas, of the Committee staff, and confirmed with her the administrative arrangements for the briefing.

raising the question with the White House as to whether Representative Halpern could be given an advanced copy of the latest drug report, "World
